YHWH told Moshe that if the people listened to Him, He would bless them with plenty of rain and good crops. He would also drive out their enemies and the wild beasts from their land.

If they didn't listen to Him, though, He would cause panic, swelling lesions, and burning fever. If they still did not listen, YHWH would break their pride, and cause the fruit trees not to bear fruit. He would also increase the plagues times seven.

If they still did not listen, He would cause the wildlife to destroy their fields and kill some of their livestock. He would also increase the plagues by another seven times.

If that did not make them repent, He would destroy everything they had and bring them into captivity. He would increase the plagues He was placing upon them yet another seven times.

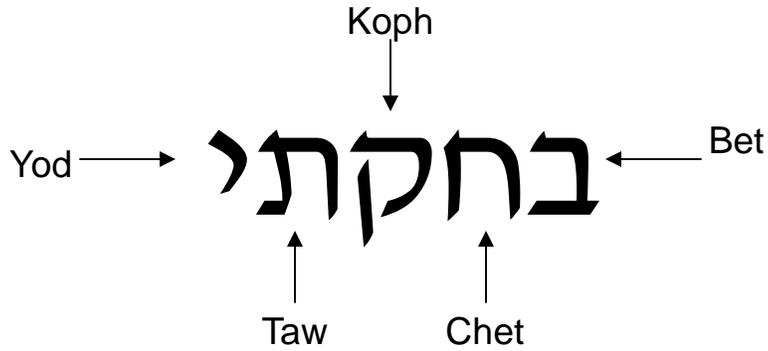

At that point, they would repent.

The last chapter then teaches us about consecrating things to YHWH; consecrating things like a person, or one of our animals, or our homes or even a field.
